- ✓ Human-Centered Design
- ✓ Urban Vision Strategies
- ✓ Social and Cultural Planning
- ✓ Co-design and Community Engagament

Ida's educational background in both architecture, urbanism and political science enables her to have a holistic approach to urban design processes, and to understand the different aspects within the dynamic conditions of contemporary society. Ida is passionate about challenging the way architecture normally is practiced and placing people at the center, to ensure good and democratic urban development that nurture social life and community. Ida has professional experience within both research and planning within the field of human centered design at GXN and Gehl architects. At arki_lab, Ida uses her strong analytical skills to improve the built environment based on citizen involvement ideas as well as planning, preparing and developing reports and strategies.
